

If 'competition' and 'diversity of information sources' are truly the tangible twin ideals for which you, the Federal Communications Commission, truly aim for in broadcast regulation; ideals that are indeed the aim of the public, then it is imperative that the safeguards that currently hinder the monopolization of a broadcast media that has already fallen prey to the homogenization of a select few be upheld, strengthened and most importantly enforced. I am reminding you of your organizations goals and duties because we the public are watching you, very closely.
